FROM MY DIARY

I've been updating the Mithras site with images that people have sent me over the last year. These go into the catalogue of monuments and inscriptions that I maintain, as and when I feel like it. I've added an entry for the "new" Mithraeum at Ostia, which has been dubbed the "Mithraeum of the coloured marbles." I think that I have dealt with the backlog.

The actual publications about the new Mithraeum are thankfully online at Academia.edu. While going through the Academia page, I noticed increased signs that the owners intend to monetise the site – containing content, remember, that they did not create. I fear that the greed of the Academia.edu owners will kill the site. But I imagine that people will just migrate to another.

I must now try to return to adding syntactical information to QuickLatin.
