CHRISTMAS EVE

I would like to wish a very Merry Christmas to everyone who reads this blog.

It is Christmas Eve here, and everything is quiet. It has rained heavily today, and then turned cold. Ice is predicted, and probably truly, for I went out for a walk late this afternoon, and it was very cold indeed. The endless rumble of commerce has ceased, for one day. The silence on Christmas Eve can be very eerie if you are on your own, as so many are.

I don't know if I shall feel like blogging tomorrow. I hope that we all have something nice to do, to celebrate the best of days.

Happy Christmas, everyone.

PS. Apologies to those who accidentally got emailed the start of a draft post on Christmas trees - I pressed publish instead of save. I discovered more research was needed!
